BUILDER'S PLANS

The home you have purchased is one of a collection of plans offered by the builder. Although the home is designed to be of the highest quality, it is impossible to anticipate all of the conditions that may be encountered during construction. Therefore, it is necessary that the builder have the flexibility to modify the plans as required by conditions encountered during construction. Such modifications may be required by the architect, engineer, building official, or the builder. Any modifications will be made with the intent of preserving the quality and character of the home. The builder is not responsible for any changes made by the building official or any other governmental agency. The builder is not responsible for any changes made by the architect or engineer without the builder's knowledge and consent. The builder is not responsible for any changes made by the owner or any other party
